Presence of a family of phytochelatins in the first land plant lineage. Phytochelatins (PCs), a class of cysteine-rich oligomers present in most plants, are synthesized in response to cadmium (Cd), and it is considered that they play a role in Cd detoxification. Here, we isolated nine genes encoding PCs from Physcomitrella patens (moss) and found that they contain two family-defining domains, that is, a 5,6-branched conformation of two cysteines followed by a smaller cysteine-rich domain. These two domains are found in all land plant species examined so far, including the most basal ones. The moss, like other land plants, expresses all six PC genes in response to Cd. These results support the view that PC synthesis is a common phytotoxic mechanism that has evolved early in the land plant lineage. Q: Ember.js - Passing a parameter to store.find with a defaultValue I have a multi-select field that I am initializing with several search results. When the user selects an item from the dropdown, I would like to do a search against a column, but I want to set a default value to this field to use when the user hasn't selected anything. store.find('letter', 'firstname') //doesn't have a default, so it searches store.find('letter', 'firstname', 12345) //searches Is there a way to set the defaultValue with store.find, or do I need to do some other logic? A: .find('letter', {firstname: 'Bart', nickname: 'Peanuts'}) Q: Why does my variable only accept numbers, not characters? I'm making a method in which I'm trying to accept, with a Scanner, two numbers. The only issue is the first one must have at least one character in it.

public static int getNumbers(Scanner sc){ System.out.println("Enter 1cdb36666d
